

What Every Principal Needs to Know About Teacher-Level Value-Added Reports

Half-Day Learning Sessions: Late January – Mid-February 2012

Attend the half-day learning session in your region, offered through RttT, to hear firsthand about the implications for you and your teachers around teacher-level value-added reports. These regional meetings are designed to prepare building leaders to successfully shepherd the process of receiving teacher-level value-added reports. You will learn about the three critical phases in this process.

Phase I—Linkage

The linkage process is a necessary step for teacher-level reporting because it provides:

- Reliability—Getting the data right.
- Transparency—Teachers are involved in the process.

Phase II—Verification

This process of verification and attribution is conducted in conjunction with teachers and involves:

- Establishing a roster of students taught through the year
- Indicating the mobility of students in and out of the classroom
- Reporting the percent of instruction a teacher has for a given student for a given tested subject

Phase III—Data Use

The final part of the process is interpreting, understanding and using the data.

- What teacher-level value-added reports tell you
- What you can expect when your teachers receive their reports
- How to access teacher-level reports and how to discuss the information wisely
- How to use teacher-level value-added reports for school improvement purposes.

PLUS—Learn about how to get involved in FIP Your School, a movement powered by RttT, which provides insight, resources and support around how teachers and leaders can use formative instructional practices to increase student achievement!
